

Beautiful Homes of Ardmore

"THE MAPLES," RESIDENCE OF W. I. CRUCE

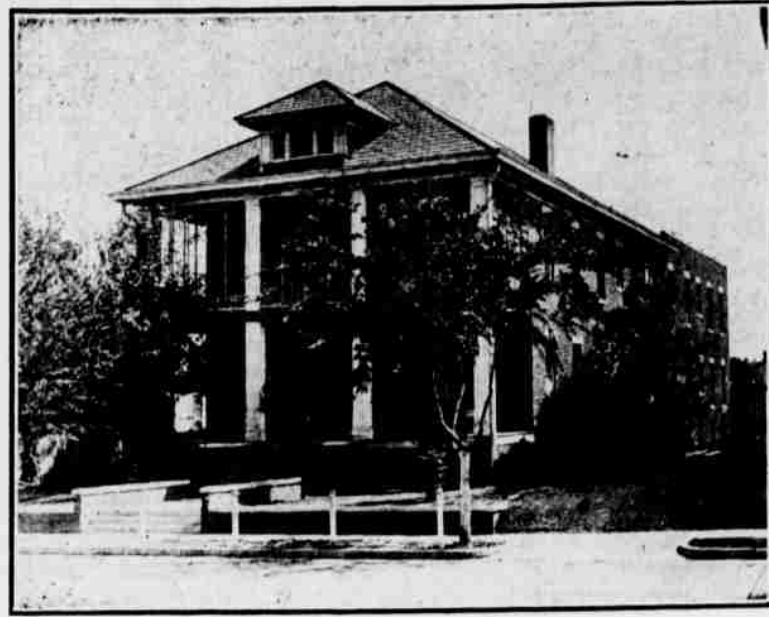

"The Maples" derives its name from the magnificent maple trees that surround this beautiful home of Southern architecture. "The Maples" has been the scene of many social events of state-wide interest.

CHAPTER NO. 2.

Today's Ardmoreite contains Chapter No. 2 of The Ardmoreite's wonderful serial story "Beautiful Homes of Ardmore." This is a story as told by the camera. We have had many favorable comments on the first chapter which appeared in last Sunday's Ardmoreite, and many of Ardmore's most progressive and public-spirited citizens have signified their intention of allowing us to place their homes on this page.

This week, as you will observe, we have in pictures the homes of four of Ardmore's most prominent families. Next Sunday's Ardmoreite will contain the names of other prominent people.

This "Story of the Camera" conveys to the mind of an outsider that the citizenship of Ardmore is permeated with a spirit of home pride. Here live people who have been successful in their undertakings, and they are justly proud, and The Ardmoreite considers it a pleasant task, indeed, to help show some of the effects of their efforts.

HARDY SANITARIUM

The home-like appearance of this modern sanitarium is very inviting, even to people who know not illness. Just recently additions have been made, and today the Hardy Sanitarium is among the best institutions of its kind in the entire South.

Beyond Question—
In planning these beautiful structures the assistance of a capable architect has been accorded full appreciation, indeed, his help was found to be indispensable. YOUR ideal of a HOME has been given material form through his expression.
Likewise its embellishment has been deemed worthy the counsel of practical and artistic talent of a decorator, and you are pleased with the result.
We ask: Are you satisfied with its furnishings?
Are you willing to risk a selection from mail order catalogues without counsel, of so important an element of your IDEAL HOME?
